

Teotihuacan

Location: United States Of America

Teotihuacan is an ancient Mesoamerican city located in the Basin of Mexico, about 30 miles northeast of modern-day Mexico City. The city is believed to have been established around 200 BCE and reached its peak around 400 CE, with a population of over 100,000 people. Teotihuacan was known for its impressive architecture, including the massive pyramids of the Sun and Moon, as well as the Temple of the Feathered Serpent. These structures were adorned with intricate carvings and murals that depicted religious and mythological themes. The city was also a major center of trade, with a network of roads and trade routes that extended throughout Mesoamerica. Teotihuacan was famous for its obsidian, a volcanic glass that was used for making tools and weapons, and was also known for its pottery and textiles. The decline of Teotihuacan is still not fully understood, but it is believed to have been a gradual process that occurred over several centuries. The city was abandoned by the 8th century, and was later rediscovered by the Aztecs, who gave it the name Teotihuacan, meaning [the place where the gods were created]. Today, Teotihuacan is a UNESCO World Heritage Site and one of the most popular tourist destinations in Mexico. Visitors can explore the ancient city's impressive structures and learn about the culture and history of the people who once inhabited this remarkable city.
